Having a learning disability and also being from an ethnic minority group feels like a double whammy because it can make it even more difficult to get good services. The people in this story show how these difficulties can be overcome. In the first part three friends get what they want in a cafe by being assertive and not giving up easily. The second part tells the story of a young woman who is having problems dealing with her bank. It shows that if people are not satisfied. About the Author RCPsych Publications is the publishing arm of the Royal College of Psychiatrists based in London United Kingdom which has been promoting excellence in mental health care since 1841. Produced by the same editorial team who publish The British Journal of Psychiatry.
